

Editorial

With this volume, our journal returns to its regular twice yearly rotation. The peer-reviewed articles in the current issue were penned almost exclusively by a younger generation and go partly back to the international postgraduate conference Perspectives of Classical Archaeology held annually at our institute. We would like to continue this practice in the future, offering young scholars the possibility to present their research to a wider audience.

The second part of the volume is dedicated to the reports. There are four papers reporting the results of the Charles University team's work in Uzbekistan, as well as the usual report on the activities of our institute in the previous year. These are complemented by an annotated list of Ph.D. dissertations defended at the institute in the course of the last 10 years. Basic information, such as defence date, the names of the advisors and reviewers, as well as the language of the thesis are complemented by a medium length abstract in English.
